Pichon: Race and Revolution in Castro's Cuba

An ethnologist and political scientist with two doctorates from the prestigious University of Paris, Carlos Moore was banished for three decades from his native Cuba as a result of his opposition to the racial policies of the Castro regime.

Remarkable yet true, this engaging autobiography chronicles the development of one man's racial and political consciousness and his search for purpose in life.

"Moore has written an astounding book about revolution, resistance, passion, and compassion . . . an irresistibly human tale."
